Questions

1. Do verbs in your conlang agree with their subjects? Their objects? What features of their arguments do verbs agree with? Can agreement stand in for pronouns?
2. What temporal categories does your conlang mark? For each one, is it an aspect or a tense? How do the different aspects and tense's meanings interact with each other?
3. Does your conlang distinguish between any moods morphologically? If so, which ones and what do they mean? If not, what strategies does your conlang use to mark modality? What do those constructions mean?
4. Thinking back to last week, what kind of marking does your conlang use on verbs? Prefixes, suffixes, apophony, other things? Does verb marking tend to be more analytic or synthetic? More fusional or agglutinative? Explain why.
